
Elli Broxham

Born 1974. Social scientist specialising in environmental policy and international development. She has had an interest in farming, rare breeds and plants, traditional cultures and products since childhood. A staff member of SAVE from 2005 to 2014 she mainly worked on projects relating to livestock breeds. Her interest in agrobiodiversity, apart from the general interest in conservation of genetic heritage, lies in the use of livestock breeds and cultivated plants in traditional customs, products and services, especially possibilities for therapeutic uses.
